GILLETTE, WY — Five months ago, Eric Barlow announced his Republican candidacy for Governor of Wyoming. When asking for support from other Wyomingites, he shared, “As Governor, I will continue to serve with the same commitment I’ve always had— being faithful to Wyoming, always listening to the people, and always focused on delivering results. Together, we can secure a future in which Wyoming remains the freest, most prosperous, and most independent state in the country.”

Today, Eric Barlow announced a statewide leadership team that represents the heart of Wyoming—ranchers, small-business owners, energy workers, parents, veterans, young professionals and community leaders who believe deeply in the future of our state. Each brings firsthand knowledge of their communities and a commitment to ensuring that Wyoming’s next chapter is built by the people who call this place home.

“These folks aren’t professional politicians—they’re neighbors and friends who care about Wyoming and want to help keep our state strong,” Barlow said. “Their leadership will help guide this campaign the same way Wyoming people make decisions every day: by listening first, understanding the needs of our communities, and working together to get things done.”

The team is led by Diana Enzi and Tony Ross, and includes a growing list of engaged Wyomingites, including:
